

A Day's Tour of LOUISVILLE

Not included in this double-loop tour are several other interesting points the tourist surely will want to visit. These include:

Cherokee Park—Another city park, with golf course, tennis courts, fishing lake, picnic areas and archery ranges, it is reached by following U. S. 60 markers east on Broadway and along Baxter, Grinstead Drive and Lexington Road to the entrance. Big Rock, Hogan's Fountain and the Daniel Boone monument are points to be seen in or near the park.

Gardencourt—Located inside Cherokee Park, this mansion, formerly the University of Louisville School of Music, is reached by continuing on Lexington Road past the park entrance to Alta Vista Road, turning right and following the markers. Free concerts are presented at Gardencourt occasionally throughout the year.

Presbyterian Theological Seminary—Immediately adjacent to Gardencourt, this 116-year-old institution was formerly located in the downtown area. The present 38-acre campus was completed in 1963. Constructed principally of Indiana limestone, the seminary buildings are of modern design and utilize a wide variety of contemporary building materials.

Southern Baptist Theological Seminary — This group of beautiful Georgian Colonial buildings, the home of one of the largest theological seminaries in the nation, is located on Lexington Road at Alta Vista. An outstanding museum of archaeology, containing pottery from the time of Christ, coins from the reign of various Roman emperors, mummy wrappings and tags and other antiquities is located in the library and is open to the public.

Seneca Park — Lying adjacent to Cherokee Park on the east, Seneca Park spreads on either side of the Middle Fork of Beargrass Creek. It has the city's sportiest public golf course, tennis courts, riding trails and day-use areas. Bowman Field, the nation's busiest privately-owned airplane landing field, is on the south edge of the park.
